

authority for the incumbent of the office, for the time being, to exercise all powers belonging to the King in respect of the Dominion of Canada. There will be no necessity for a second document similar to that heretofore in use. There will be, of course, a document appointing some one to the office of Viceroy of the Dominion of Canada.

As above stated, the Governor-General, while acting under the instructions of the British Government, acted in a dual capacity. One of his capacities was that of Governor, and the other that of diplomatic representative. Now both his relations with the British Government have ceased to exist. The Governor becomes a Viceroy in communication with the King, and it would be incompatible with that office that he should be a diplomatic representative of the British Government. It is, therefore, contemplated that some person should be appointed by that Government as its diplomatic representative in Canada. What his official title is to be has not yet been decided. But his functions will be similar to those which he would exercise were he accredited to a completely foreign Government. Mr. Larkin, our representative in London, has in effect acted as our diplomatic representative there. It has been suggested that that fact should be indicated in the change of, or the addition to, his present title of High Commissioner. Whether that takes place or not, diplomatic relations between the British and Canadian Governments are now to be placed upon the footing usual between the Governments of independent States.
